TRANSIT

Transit is what we all ride to go from here to there . . . everywhere. It's a way for two or more people to go from place to place!

Meet my best friends.

This is Carson.

And this is Carson's
sister, Abby.

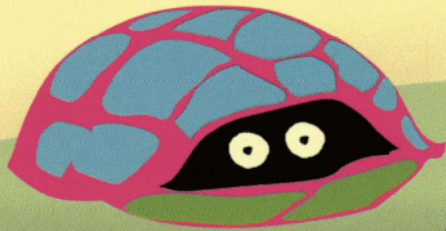

Say hi to Carson.

Say hi to Abby.

When Abby, Carson and I want to go place to place,
we need a ride.

We are going to my house!
I take it with me every where I go.

I'm inside my house.
See my eyes?

When Carson
and Abby
hop inside,
now we are all riding in transit too!

See the bicycle?

Abby and Carson are using the bicycle to go to the bus stop. Bicycles link one form of transit to another, said
Turbo.
A bicycle can be a form of transit.

See the bus?

People ride buses
to go to the store, or go
to the shore,
or go out for more. A bus is another form of

'TRANSIT'.

Riding transit is fun to do . . .
because there is more than one and I have someone to talk to!!

So when you need a ride,
you can use transit too.

Can you find the types of

on the map on the next page?

Use the forms of transit below to go from your house to the grocery store,
school, the park, and the post office.

Bicycle

Horse

Bus

Rowboat

Car

* Abby is the only child who does not attend the Native American School. She entered independently (and is not representing any school just herself) -- i.e. -- she wanted to draw her picture when she learned what the others were doing. Her age is 6 years and she is in Jackson, MS. We have her mother's permission to just place the picture internally.
